PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Master of Music Program

A two-year program, the Master of Music offers specialization in the areas of performance (piano, voice, choral/instrumental conducting, string and wind instruments), research (music education and musicology), and creative work (composition).

The core of the curriculum is composed of music analyses (pre-twentieth and twentieth century music) and research methodology.

Specialization strengthens the student's main area of study and includes the required six units of foreign language/s and another six units of allied music/non-music elective courses.

Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) in Music

A 45-unit offering, the PhD in Music is a pioneering doctoral program in music in the Philippines. Interdisciplinary in nature, it aims to train students to do intensive research that would produce new, critical, or revisionary knowledge about music in the Asia Pacific region.

The program is founded on a solid tradition of music scholarship that is sensitive to the concerns and coverage of Philippine and Asian Studies.

A 12-unit dissertation is the terminal requirement for the granting of the Doctor of Philosophy in Music degree. This document must be a significant and original contribution to the knowledge about music in its various contexts.
